Large Quantities on Short Notice. For the last two years I have inraished the Morter for various large bushings, und u.t. them the Parshall block—liked the following remark ABOUT LIME, SAND AND PROFORCION FOR MORTAL

Most mon know that the him and suid are the common ingredients of morts that there are saveral varieties and qualities of each and that when they are properly selected, proportional and commungled they will form a cument and commungled they will form a cument and codure for sayes. On the other hand we know that the greater proportion or inortary as now mids and need, soon trumble, and waste away and this exhibit a the fact that poor mortars and in the end very expensive. One thing is certain we either do or do not know how to make them. If we do know how how to make them. If we do know how they should be made to last and endore them they should be made to last and endore then their be put in every contract that it shall be done. let it be put in every contract their it shall in done. If we do not know, let us was the truth and try and learn. I believe that when good mortars are made that it is more the result of happen to hit than oil knowledge, and that some method or rule of proportioning the magnetinents is required rout the materials to be used, that can be man't from the materials to be used, that can be min't from the materials to be used, that can be min't from the materials to be used, but the too the proportion and commingle them. To make the very best we must know how to get a some statement of the solution of the materials to the property proportion morter if it is not properly prepared and thorought commingled Min campor be relied upon to do it. Nothing but a machine will work mortar as it ought to be
